

In my neighborhood quite by accident, I allowed hackers via wireless remote access into my computer to download a porn web fantasy game. I have tried repeatedly to erase the software and finally sent the computer to the original home office for repair. Now I am receiving threats from the hackers because I have copies of network structure on CDs and will not give them the money or the CDs they are requesting. I purchased the computer at Radio Shack in Marlboro, MA. The software was already on the laptop because an employee had prepared the computer for himself and I purchased it before he did. I feel the computer mixup is the reason I had the programs in the first place. I logged on to AOL then to /Windows home site turning on Remote access. Remote server then turned off explorer using the Hewlett Packard home page as the web base home support structure base. I was trying to download photo and information regarding my computer (I know nothing) and let them take over basically. Media player one was installed and a fantasy role playing game installed. I am embarrassed to say as a 49 year old single woman, I thought the technician was trying to date me so I picked the lady in the game and he picked the knight. What has transpired since these events has been a nightmare and I am now frightened. I cannot seem to make the game host remote players realize I do not participate in pornography nor have I ever. I am outraged that I was duped and had no idea that my computer even had a web cam until the latest threat. I have never received a bill, seen a real web page, gotten a real name, as these hackers use real web sites as fronts and block what is happening behind the scene. I had no idea identity theft really took place, black market web porno rings existed or that people could be blackmailed for money if they wanted to quit these things. If this is happening to me then there are others and however shameful this will get someone needs to stand up and say no. You can not do this to me. I sent the laptop back to Radio Shack to be reserviced after the operating system was deleted by the remote service. Tonight I received an anonymous phone call stating that all the hardware in this computer was deleted and that no traces of the web ring would be found. I WOULD HATE TO THINK THAT THE REPAIR DEPARTMENT OF HP/COMPAQ AND RADIO SHACK OF MARLBORO HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH THIS NOR THE VARIOUS COMPANIES USED TO PARTICIPATE IN THIS PORNO RING.
